Profile

An attentive and thoughtful advocate for individuals who have sustained injuries to themselves or loved ones, Laura Llanso is a dedicated trial attorney in Stein Sperling’s injury law practice. She works to thoroughly understand her clients and their cases, establishing a trusting relationship that leads to effective advocacy in court.

Laura is adept at clearly and realistically explaining to her clients the ways in which their cases may succeed or face challenges. She recognizes that many who seek her guidance may already have tried unsuccessfully to resolve their cases in some manner. As such, time has passed since they or their loved one was injured, and they may be feeling stress about paying bills, supporting their families, and recovering fully. Laura crafts personalized legal strategies for each case so that they may be resolved as quickly and successfully as possible, either through successful negotiation or a trial.

Laura is a tenacious advocate in the courtroom, but prides herself on her congenial personality and desire to seek cooperation with all involved, including opposing counsel.

Prior to joining Stein Sperling, Laura worked at a consulting firm providing analysis of available health insurance and the costs of future medical care. She originally intended to be a lobbyist but ultimately found herself compelled to work in law to best pursue her calling: “I am passionate about righting wrongs.”
